But, it is said, this life is brutalizing and demoralizing. The boys grow up stupid, heavy, animal, no without power of reading and writing but without the power of observing and reflecting, while the girls in the field-work lose all respect, not only for chastity, but for the semblance of decorum; and, if not ruined in their morals, become utterly unfitted for the duties of wives. We fear that there is too much truth in this. the same time, the description of one class of people by an entirely differ-ent class is liable to exaggeration. With regard to the condition of the woman and children in certain dis-tricts, it is simply abominable.
